Question 1

Dr. Dylan Barth

Dr. Leslee D'Amato-Kubiet

I understand the need for structure and scheduling. However, my business courses often include breaking news events. I need a little flexibility to add assignments, readings, discussions, etc.. Other than a disclaimer in the course syllabus, any advice about how much additional info and required work to add into a course that is already set up?

Question 2

Dr. Dylan Barth

Dr. Leslee D'Amato-Kubiet

What ideas / resources do you have for evaluating / observing instructors who teach blended courses?

Question 3

Dr. Dylan Barth

Dr. Leslee D'Amato-Kubiet

Listening to faculty share their experiences on how they improved their blended/online courses based on peer feedback and to what extent checklist reviews and critiques were helpful. How much of the peer review process was in-person and how much online?

(If possible, describe rubric criteria that specifically assess the integration of F2F and online courses.)

Question 4

Dr. Dylan Barth

Dr. Leslee D'Amato-Kubiet

How do I answer the critique of blended learning pedagogy. In that it does not met the traditional requirements of rigor, transferability, transparency and repeatability because it treats each learner as an individual case?

Question 5

Dr. Dylan Barth

Dr. Leslee D'Amato-Kubiet

Though there is no universal criteria for the quality of blended learning, could you please elaborate a little bit how we could make the best of two: traditional and online learning? How have you done it?
